First Baptist Churches.

The name Baptist was first given to certain congregations of English Separatists which had recently restored the ancient practice of immersion, in 1644, but the congregations were several years older than that. There were two bodies of Baptists founded before that date—the Arminians, established by the followers of John Smyth, who had been a clergyman of the Church of England, founding the first General Baptist church in London in 1611, and the Calvinists, or Particular, Baptist church, established in London in 1616.

Using Rice Bran.

Only within the last two years have the manufacturers of the rice bran, in China, realized its real worth. Before that time, the bran was either wasted or fed to stock. Now ten mills in Shanghai cannot supply the demand for bran needed by other nations. This bran has proved not only an excellent food for stock, but also a good fertilizer.

Effect of Tides.

For a long time it has been known that the tides act as a brake on the rotating earth and that they tend to lengthen the day. The effect is, however, so slight that it cannot be measured in any length of time at man's disposal. MacMillan has made the necessary computation by the formula used by engineers. He finds for the increase of the length of the day one second in 460,000 years.

Had Beau Once.

Was visiting in the country this summer, and everyone had a beau with the exception of me, my husband being in town. Someone thought they would tease my daughter, Jane, by saying, "Everyone has a beau except your mother." She replied, "I don't care. My mother had a beau once and he turned into a husband."—Cleveland Leader.

Do Sit Down.

In England when the chair was first used, even wealthy men only owned one or two, it was the seat of honor given to a guest as a special mark of favor. The American colonists followed this custom during the first part of the seventeenth century.

PLENTY OF WORK

ceived by members of Congress and the White House. In every case it is argued that the increased cost of living in the United States demands a restriction of shipments abroad. So far as has been disclosed President Wilson and members of the cabinet have no plans for acting on the subject, but it is known that various members of Congress intend to push the subject and it may develop a fight. Chairman Fitzgerald, of the appropriations committee, already has announced his intention of introducing a bill for a food embargo.

Woman suffragists, renewing their fight for passage of the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the constitution, have laid all the lines for their campaign, and it is possible that their demands may be crowded into the short time Congress has to deal with an important budget of legislation. Prohibitionists, no less ardent than the suffragists, in their demand for a federal amendment, are expected to begin their fight anew.

The first day of the session never sees much business done. Re-elected members get congratulations; defeated ones receive condolences; majority and minority leaders receive ovations as they walk down the aisle. Galleries are crowded with wives and friends of members who join in the demonstrations of hand clapping and cheering as their favorites take their seats; except in the Senate where a dignified calm prevails. A few formalities mixed with a few informalities always compose the first day's business and then the House as well as the Senate adjourns until tomorrow to hear President Wilson deliver his annual address.

In accordance with the custom he set at the beginning of his term, President Wilson will read his address from the clerk's desk in the Hall of the House while Senators and Representatives are assembled before him on the benches. Members of the diplomatic corps hear him from their places in the reserved seats on the floor. The President's message is about 2,000 words long; is purely a discussion of domestic issues, the "state of the union" and gives first prominence to the railway situation.

Today's opening marks the closing of man's monopoly of membership in the House of Representatives. In the next Congress the clerks and the pages and the Speaker will be calling: "The Lady from Montana."

Miss Jeanette Rankin, Republican, first woman elected to Congress, is expected to be in her seat then. She does not sit in the present session—although many uninformed expected to see her today—when comes in with the new Congress. When she does arrive the House will be confronted with revising its own rules to give her a place on the floor.

In the Senate there were three new members to take the oath of office. James E. Watson, of Indiana, Republican, takes the unexpired term of the late Senator Shively, Democrat, who was temporarily succeeded by Thomas Taggart. Bert M. Fernald, Republican, of Maine, was elected to the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Burleigh. William F. Kirby, Democrat, of Arkansas, was elected to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator Clarke.

While the organization fight in the House does not come until the assembling of the next Congress, the Senate probably will see some political generalship in the selection of a successor of Senator Clarke as president pro tempore. Senators who have their eyes on the majority floor leadership, made vacant by the defeat of Senator Kern, are loath to take the office of pro tempore. Strangely enough the disposition seems to be to avoid an office instead of seeking it, because senators realize that the man who becomes president pro tempore is out of the race for the floor leadership. There have been some indications that the situation might be solved by giving the office of president pro tempore to Senator O'Gorman, who retires with the end of the Congress. This, it is pointed out, would be a compliment to the retiring senator, and would leave all the candidates for the leadership free to enter the contest. It is generally conceded that while the important appropriation bills for the fiscal year will occupy most of the time between now and adjournment, much general legislation on the administration program would be urged.
